Bob Taylor's Wonderful Eloquence.

The contest between the Taylor brothers for the governorship of Tennessee is the most remarkable political battle which ever took place in this country. From the reports which have appeared from time to time in the REGISTER our readers are familiar with it. A friend in Chattanooga has sent us a copy of the Times containing a six-column report of a speech delivered by Bob Taylor, the Democratic candidate, at Madisonville, September 9. Although mysteriously in argument, Bob's chief strength lies in his wonderful eloquence, and that the people of Iron county may judge for themselves, we print the opening and closing parts of the speech.

FELLOW CITIZENS:—In the days of the Roman Empire it was the custom of the Emperors to amuse themselves and their subjects with cruel and bloody entertainments called gladiatorial combats. It is possible that many of you have come here to-day with the fear that you may witness a similar exhibition of brutality between two brothers scrambling for the same office. Allow me to assure you that you will be agreeably disappointed. Thank God, we are not in Rome. The Roman Empire, its subjects and victims, lie buried in the dusty tombs of by-gone centuries. A better and brighter age God has reserved for us. As the eagle spurns the earth and builds her nest on the cliffed crag above the storm clouds and storms, so the spirit of liberty has enthroned herself in the New World and raised her millions of sons and daughters, where every home is the castle and palace of a prince and every citizen a sovereign. It is the chief glory of our great Republic that all men are free as the eagle and untrammelled in thought and action as the unfettered winds of heaven. As God has diversified His creation and stars and sun of heaven to differ from each other in glory in movement and position, and sent them all circling in space in perfect harmony, so in politics He diversified our people in thought and opinion, yet harmonized all on one great principle of free government. In this country there are two great ideas of free government—the Republican idea and Democratic idea. The representative of the Republican idea in this campaign is my brother. It devolves upon me as the choice of the Democratic party of Tennessee, to present the Democratic idea. Is there anything improper, delicate or unbrotherly in our meeting to discuss publicly the interests of a great state and a great nation under these two ideas? We have met to wrangle, or quarrel, or scramble for the high office for which we have been made candidates. The tender bond of brotherhood is neither severed nor abraded by our difference of opinion in politics, nor can the discussion of political questions disturb the delicate relations. The red rose and the white rose bloom together and shed their odors upon the same atmosphere, and gently struggling for supremacy, glorify the twilight hours. My brother represents to-day the red rose and I represent the white. Our political histories vary in this—that in my boyhood I was transported by tender and loving hands into the sweet gardens of pure Democracy; while he, like the "last rose of summer," in the desert of Republicanism, was left blooming alone.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.
But, fellow citizens, when you shall all have taken a smell, and then taken your choice of blossoms, the red rose will have the happy consolation that he is the brother of the Governor.

Fellow citizens: I meet you and greet you and congratulate you upon the final triumph of Democratic principles. For twenty long, weary years those principles were trampled under foot and the party that clung to them and preached them met defeat and disaster in every quadrennial contest. But we never lost heart, for we knew that those principles were true, that they were as eternal as God, that they would live when the stars were wiped from the sun is cold, and the leaves of the judgment book unfolded. In the year of our Lord 1864, those principles triumphed, and the party of Jefferson and Johnson and Polk and Fremont and Sumner and Grant and Sherman and Lincoln, her spindles and looms make music, her machines shops rattle and roar, and her furnaces and mills, like giant spiders, spin their threads of steel to cobweb the continent with telegraphs and railways.

No more shall the musket rattle,
Nor crash the shot and shell,
No more the red tide of battle
O'er the South shall surge and swell.

The South, abandoning in good faith the hatreds of war, has long since thrown open her gates of welcome and invited the men of the North to enter with their capital and enterprise and lend a helping hand to the work of restoration. They cordially accepted the invitation and were received with open arms, and the men who wore the blue and the men who wore the gray, reconciled and re-united in the bonds of brotherhood, are to-day shoulder to shoulder, working out the grand destiny of the new South and the whole nation.

On mountain and hilltop, slope and plain, by river and brook, in hamlet and city, where hostile armies, like busy shuttles, wove the woof of ruin and death, her peaceful flocks and herds are feeding, her farmers sow and reap, her miners delve, her factories hum, her spindles and looms make music, her machines shops rattle and roar, and her furnaces and mills, like giant spiders, spin their threads of steel to cobweb the continent with telegraphs and railways.

No more shall the musket rattle,
Nor crash the shot and shell,
No more the red tide of battle
O'er the South shall surge and swell.

The South, abandoning in good faith the hatreds of war, has long since thrown open her gates of welcome and invited the men of the North to enter with their capital and enterprise and lend a helping hand to the work of restoration. They cordially accepted the invitation and were received with open arms, and the men who wore the blue and the men who wore the gray, reconciled and re-united in the bonds of brotherhood, are to-day shoulder to shoulder, working out the grand destiny of the new South and the whole nation.

Aug. Winkler, the Jeweler, has taken a terrible fall in the Jewelry Line. We will give you a few items, but remember this fall of prices will only last about ten days: According to $2, $3, $4, $5, and $6. I will guarantee anybody, who will purchase the same kind of an accession anywhere else for double the amount, $1.00 in cash! And the same bargain I will make on Violins—they are really given away. Prices: $2, $2.50, and $3; and double that amount will not get the same kind of violin any other place. The above includes bow and box. The genuine Richter Harp, that never was sold at any place for less than $25, I will sell at 10 cents. A. WINKLER, Jeweler, Sept. 29.
